

Understand the various ways fraudsters try to obtain your personal and debit card information. The more you know, the more you can stay one step ahead of fraud.

Personal information:

Phishing's a scam in which fraudsters pose as legitimate businesses to trick you into divulging your social security number, account numbers, passwords or other sensitive personal information.

Hiding behind the anonymity of emails and phone calls, the fraudsters pretend to be reputable financial institutions, credit card companies, online service providers, retailers, etc. They'll try and convince you there's an immediate need to update your financial information.

Steps to take:

- Remember: no legitimate business will request this type of information.
- Don't give out your personal information.